The International Communication Project (ICP) advocates for those with communication disabilities, as well as their families, caregivers and communication professionals. The ICP highlights the importance of human communication and how communication disabilities significantly impact every aspect of life.

Established in 2014, the ICP is built on the premise that communication is vital to life; yet is largely ignored as a disability.

The ICP joins organisations from around the world in advocating for people with communication disorders and raising the profile of communication disabilities through a range of activities and events that take place across the globe, with opportunities for participation at the virtual, local, national and international level.
